

How to Help a Loved One in a Mental Health Crisis

Signs that a person may be experiencing a mental health crisis:

- Thoughts of harming self or others
- Attempts at harming self or others
- Mental health symptoms that impact ability to function or care for basic needs

Options in a mental health crisis:

1. Call 9-1-1

If the person is presenting an immediate risk of danger to themselves or others, call 911. You may also call 911 to request a wellness check if you are unsure of their current safety.

1. Call the Helpline Center through the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline 1-800-273-TALK (8255)

The Lifeline is available 24 hours a day 7 days a week. People may call for themselves or for a loved one who is struggling. Trained crisis workers are available to talk, assess the level of risk, and develop a plan to help keep the person safe.

1. Go to the hospital for a mental health assessment

A mental health assessment is performed by a mental health clinician to assess a person's safety and determine the appropriate level of mental health care for that person. A mental health assessment can be completed at a psychiatric hospital or at any community hospital or emergency room. Based upon the assessment, a clinician may recommend that the person be admitted to an inpatient mental health facility.

1. Initiate involuntary commitment (IVC)

If a loved one is experiencing a mental health or substance use-related crisis and is refusing treatment, it may be appropriate to file a petition for involuntary commitment. This process is typically initiated through your local law enforcement or the clerk of courts. Call 211 for a referral to the appropriate entity.
